CoQ-Clear®

Coenzyme Q10 is known as Ubiquinone and Ubiquinol. Ubiquinone is the active form of Ubiquinol. Ubiquinol serves as a reservoir from which your body can convert or make Ubiquinone. Ubiquinone is a major part of the body's mechanism for producing energy. The name of this supplement comes from the word ubiquitous, which means "found everywhere." Indeed, CoQ10 is found in every cell in the body.

Ubiquinone plays a fundamental role in the mitochondria, the parts of the cell that produce energy from glucose and fatty acids. It creates an environment within the cell that accepts and donates energy as needed by all major functions of the cell. The "left-over" CoQ10—spent and exhausted of activity—is Ubiquinol. Ubiquinol is then pooled in a reservoir outside the cell to be recycled to form Ubiquinone inside the cell.
